

The rectangular structure of the northern-stretching building is meant to relay to the orthagonal forms of the surrounding structures, yet it is no longer on the old grid, and using the healing grid, is now slanted and hoisted off the ground by posts inspired by that found in native structures.

The bridge offers a 24/7 circulation as well as allows views into the interior below

Throughout the site the landscape breaks apart in fractured shards that push up follow the new sowed grid: A wound that is healing- the peices of the diamond reforming

